

Natural And Epoxy

Nature Amber

Amber is actually not a stone, but rather amorphous, fossilized tree sap. Amber comes from the fossilized resin that lived tens of millions of years ago in trees. It is normally a golden yellow to golden orange, and ranges from transparent to semi translucent.

Amber may contain insects, (occasionally frogs and lizards too) moss, or pine needles that have been trapped for millions of years in the resin, since the resin was sticky. Air bubbles may give amber a cloudy appearance but heating in oil will take them away.

The epoxy resin process is based on the same principles as amber .

It can seal all the beauty of the natural world.

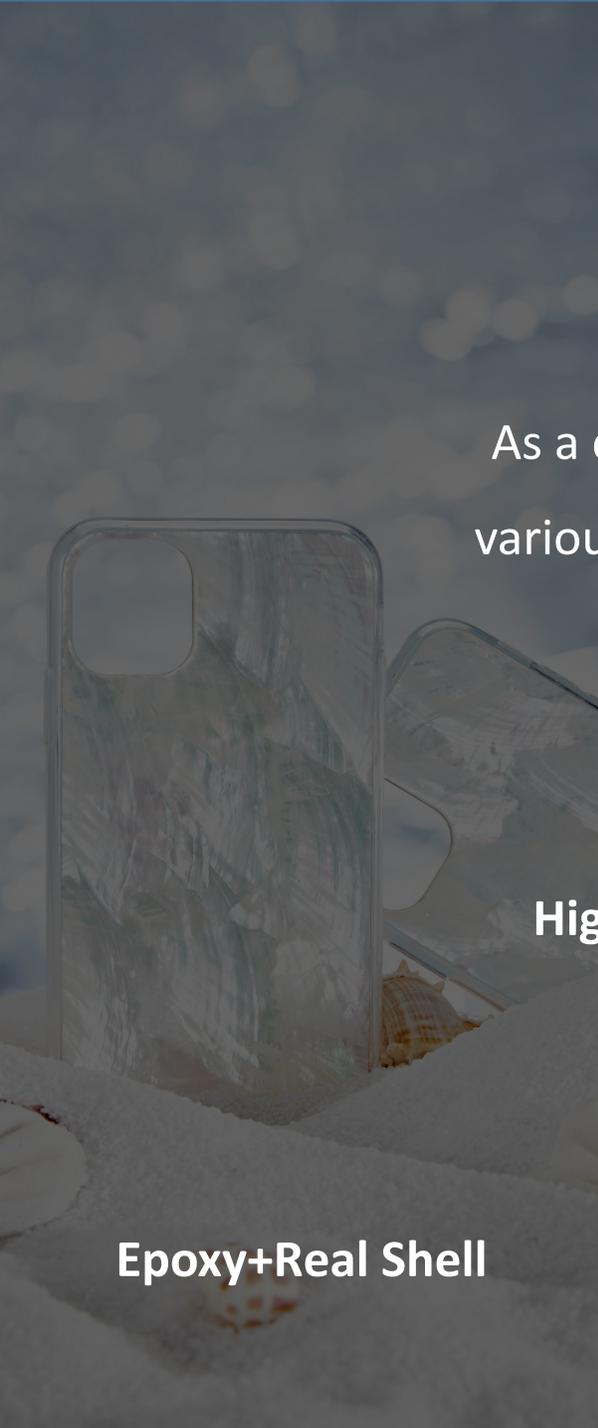

What is epoxy ?

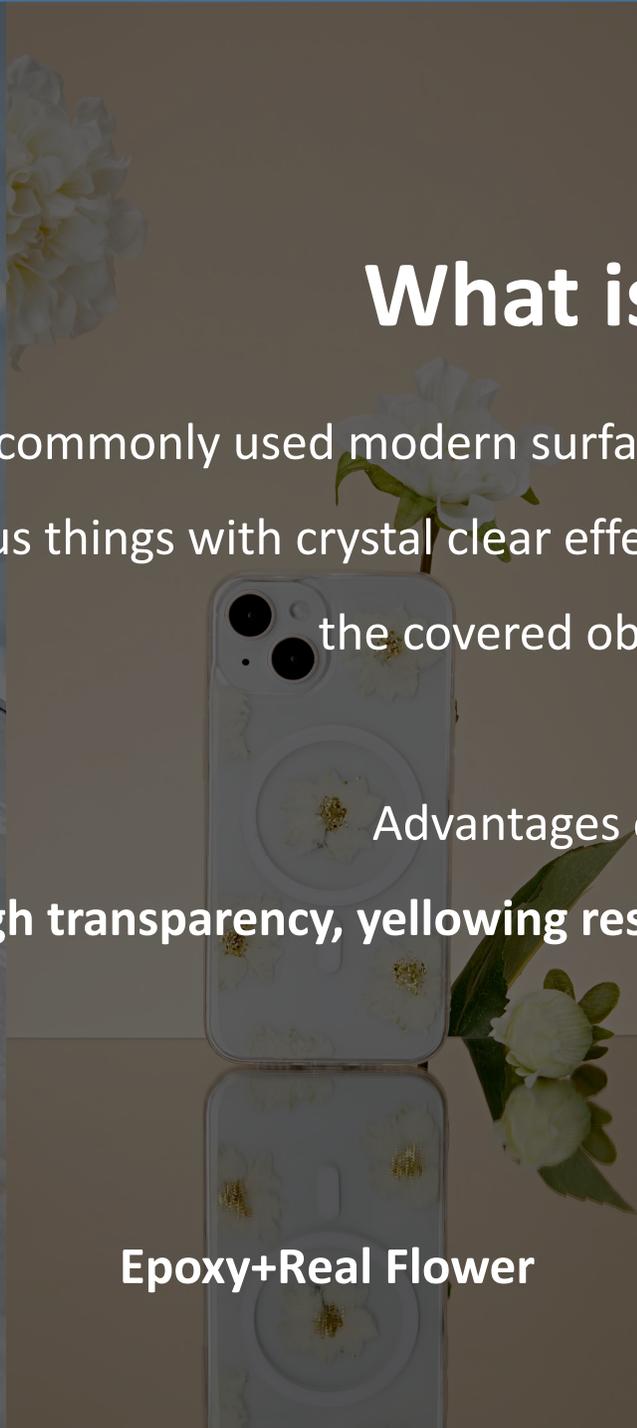

As a commonly used modern surface coating technology, epoxy can cover various things with crystal clear effect and can keep the color and texture of the covered object for a long time.

Advantages of epoxy process:

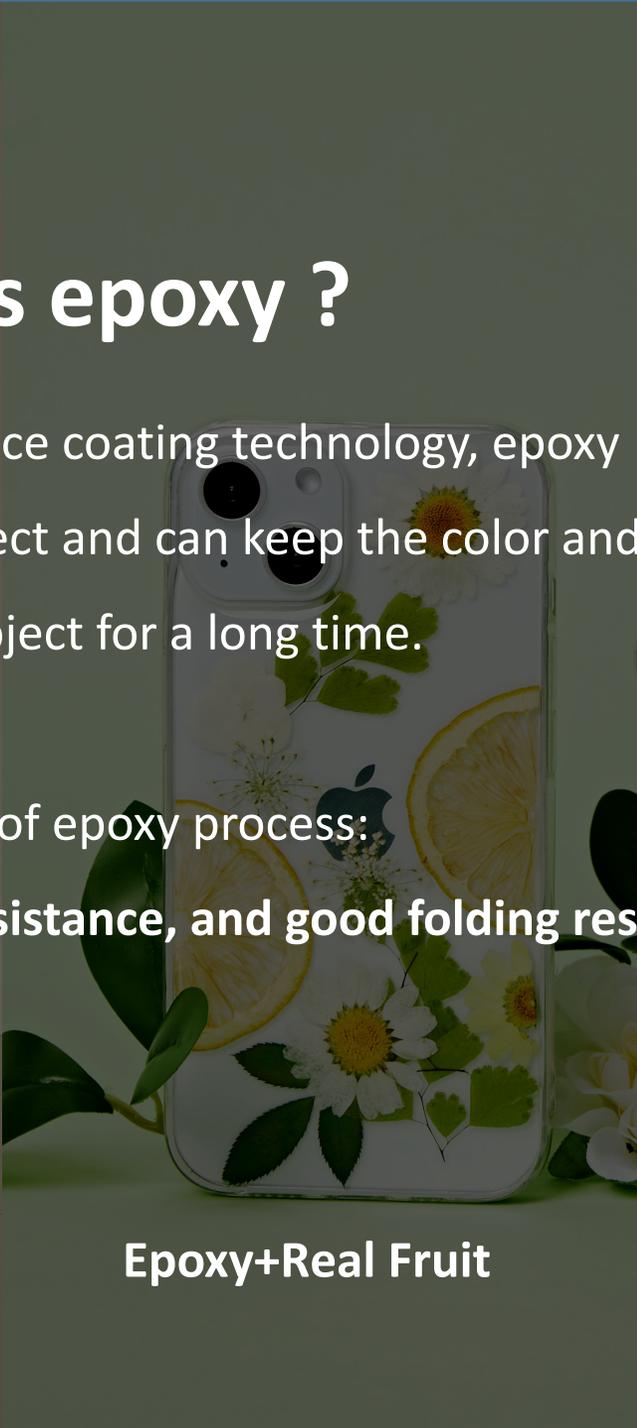

High transparency, yellowing resistance, and good folding resistance.
